(2) In exercising their discretion, the assigned member(s) may determine that the facts of the case justify that the nature of the evidence given or representations made by a party should be disclosed to one or more of the other parties, in whole or in part, based on a balancing of the requirements of preventing injury to national security, national defence, or international relations of Canada with procedural fairness.

(3) In exercising their discretion, the assigned member(s) may determine that the facts of the case justify that the nature of the evidence given or representations made by a party should be disclosed to one or more of the other parties, in whole or in part, based on a balancing of the requirements of preventing injury to national security, national defence, or international relations of Canada with procedural fairness.

(4) If the assigned member(s) determines that the substance of the evidence and written representations made by one party shall be disclosed, in whole or in part, to other parties, the other parties may, upon the direction of the assigned member(s), present evidence in reply and to comment on those written representations.
